The CRITCOR project, in its third phase, organised an international training course on the detection, prosecution and sentencing of corruption offences. The training was based on a specific methodology and participants exchanged experiences through case studies. The anonymised cases were prepared and developed by representatives of the source country and the partners involved in the project. The case work also provided an opportunity to discuss specific investigative techniques and tactics, the use of covert means, investigative supervision and sentencing issues. The joint reflection also helped to achieve the specific objective of the project, which was to identify indicators to distinguish between low and high volume cases. This volume provides an overview of the event and its results.

The Volume was carried out by the project entitled 'Corruption risk, risk of corruption? Distinguishing criteria between petty and high-ranking corruption' (101014783 – CRITCOR), which was supported by the Hercule III program of the European Union.
